Citroen C3 by Musketier

09/02/2011 18:06 by admin

We rarely hear from the Musketier tuning firm, but that doesn?t mean that mean these guys have fallen off the face of the earth. Recently, the German tuning company that specializes on aftermarket works done on Toyota, Citroen and Peugeot vehicles unveiled their latest work on the Citroen C3. Taking inspiration from the higher-spec DS3, Musketier went out and added some new aesthetic touches on the C3, including the addition of LED daytime running lights on the car?s vertical front bumper with a matching contrasting color painted on the edges of the C3?s fenders and the lower edge of the bumper. On top of that, Musketier also reshaped the car?s rear lower lip to be able to install the twin exhaust system. The tuning firm also lowered the car?s overall ride height by 35 mm and while also installing a set of 18? wheels. Over at the interior, Musketier dressed up the C3 with leather upholstery while adding touches of carbon fiber and aluminum. Finally, the German tuning company also tweaked with the C3?s electronic system, resulting in a boost in output from 115 horsepower to 129 horsepower.[...]

Source: topspeed Tuning