When you have a car that's already considered the most powerful sedan in the world, it seems that some people would think that any additional performance upgrade is just overkill. But don't tell that to GAD-Motors because it has a habit of doing just that. And no, we don't belong in that group who believes that more power equates to less appeal. In fact, we skew more toward the opposite train of thought. The Mercedes C63 AMG-based Brabus Bullit already packs a whopping 720 horsepower under its hood. That's a lot, by any stretch of the imagination. But in all its awesomeness, GAD-Motors wants more out of the Bullit and like the enterprising aftermarket company that it is, the tuner went and did just that, fitting the Bullit with an assortment of performance modifications, including upgrades to the turbochargers and intercoolers to go with a new custom air box and new injectors. The result, believe it or not, is a C-Class that packs a whopping 894 horsepower and 1,047 pound-feet of torque.[...]
