LUMMA Design paired up once again with Russian tuner TopCar and show at the 2010 Moscow Motor Show their latest program for the BMW 5-Series F10. Dubbed the CLR 500 RS2, the pack brings an extra topping of aggression for the vehicle. For the exterior, the tuners are offering a carbon fiber hood, wing extensions, a redesigned front bumper with integrated LED side markers and huge air intakes, new side skirts, a new rear spoiler mounted on the trunk, and a diffuser made by carbon fiber. The taillights, the windows and the windscreen received a black tint. Rounding off the exterior of the BMW is a new set of custom 19" Prime wheels in matte black. Under the hood, the 5 Series F10 received the 3.0-liter Twin Turbo 535i-based engine managing to deliver a total of 380hp, a significant increase over the 306hp found in the stock engine. The interior has been completely redone with Nappa leather and carbon fiber trim inserts. The CLR 500 RS2 can fill up your garage for "only" 136,933 euros.
