

Chrysler 200 Super S by Mopar

07/01/2011 10:13 by admin

Having an auto show without any Mopar vehicles is like having a sundae without any whipped cream; it may still taste good, but it's just not the same. Thankfully, we won't have to experience that because the Detroit Auto Show will be chalk full of "Moparized" models. Among them there will be a Chrysler 200 Super S that has received the full on Mopar treatment. To get to this final project as seen in the rendering released by Chrysler, Mopar started off with a 2011 Chrysler 200 which they then covered in a Black and Tungsten - which is just a fancy way of saying black and gray - paint scheme. After that, the tuners added a gloss black grille surround, a gloss black mesh grille, recessed wing badge, vented hood, and lower chin spoiler. Other small additions consist of a fog light bezel with light bar and brake induction openings. This rendering doesn't show the back of the car, but if it did, we'd see a bright exhaust tip and a decklid spoiler. The exterior package is finished off with a new set of 19" wheels.[...]

Source: topspeed