Audi has revealed the A7 last year in December, and during its very short time this is the first time we hear about a tuning proposition for it. And of course the tuner is no other than MTM. And of course as this is the first tuning package the changes aren't as significant as you might have expected, but an extra 40 HP on a diesel A7 is always something to take under consideration. The only modifications MTM made to the exterior include a new set of Bimoto 9-spoke design alloy wheels and a new diffuser with a 4-tailpipe exhaust system. Significant changes were made under the hood for the 3.0 TDI quattro version. Thanks to the revision of the engine electronics, the engine has received an upgrade of 41 HP from 244 to 285 HP. The package is finished by a new set of special wheel spacers (20 or 30 mm round head per axle) and an electronic lowering module.[...]
