

Lamborghini Gallardo Spyder by Job Design

23/02/2011 04:03 by admin

What does it take to transform a beautiful piece of intricately designed machinery into a pile of trashy and tacky dog poop? Well, that's easy, just hire a tuner that has no idea what they are doing and let them put their stamp on your ride. The idea of this may seem absolutely ridiculous to some, but someone apparently thought it was a novel idea when they handed over their Lamborghini Gallardo Spyder to tuning firm, Job Design. The sad part is that we really liked the tuning kit Job Design provided for the 2010 Lexus LS460. The Lamborghini was painted in blue with black stripes and racing graphics, and that's the only good part to the design. The aerodynamic package is where it gets a little, we'll say tricky. There's a new front bumper and a huge rear wing that simply don't fit the car's general look, not to mention the new blue wheels with orange margins and LED light insertions. The model standing next to it it barely smiling so she must know how bad this looks[...]

Source: topspeed Tuning