The first Mercedes SLS AMG to receive a makeover for Geneva was the "Hamann Hawk" by none other than Hamann. Dressed up in a prissy Everose Gold, this tuning package for the SLS model received a power boost up to 636hp. This is all fine and dandy, but it's time for the Hamann Hawk to meet the more sinister side of the Mercedes SLS AMG. It's time for the "Cormeum" by Mansory to take its place in the winner's circle. The first thing anyone will notice on the made over SLS AMG is the intense use of carbon fiber and the aggressive body kit attached to it, but under the hood there is a small can of whoop-ass just waiting to be opened. Engine updates come in the form of a power boost to 660hp, with an 800hp package currently in the works.[...]
