It's kind of hard to imagine that Hamann has been around the industry since 1986. Yep. 25 years, and still going strong. The Laupheim-based aftermarket specialist currently has a long list of tuned up vehicles to its credit and while some were better off than others, one thing that you can count on is that Hamann will most definitely bring the good with every project they take on. If you wanted any more proof of that, look no further than their latest program for the Porsche Cayenne Turbo called the "Guardian", which they debuted at the 2011 Geneva Motor Show. The program, which consists of powerful performance enhancements, new aerodynamic components, and a luxed-up interior, certainly doesn't lack for aesthetic and engine upgrades. Not that we're complaining because the whole program is actually pretty impressive. Then again, we really shouldn't have expected anything less than spectacular from these guys, right? They've been around longer than many of us have been born, and if you can stay that long in the business without a hint of drop-off, then you must be doing something good[...]
