It might sound a little insensitive to be talking about a tuning package that makes reference to a natural disaster given the things going on in Japan these days, but then again, G-Power's work on the new X6 M dubbed the 'Typhoon S' certainly has no connection to the tragedies in Japan. The German tuning firm has made a handsome living with their works on BMWs in the past, and with their latest offering, these guys are still a long way from slowing down. The 'Typhoon S' features a comprehensive tuning package for the X6, one that includes both aerodynamic and performance improvements. Despite having little to no interior upgrades, G-Power still dressed up the SUV's exterior with new body parts that improve not just the car's overall look, but also its effect on performance figures. And speaking of power updates, the Typhoon S was given quite the performance spike, reaching an output north of 726 horsepower - compare that to the Typhoon's 'pedestrian' 600-horsepower output - making this particular X6 one of the most powerful of its kind in the world[...]
