British tuning firm Project Khan is no stranger to working up some awesome aerodynamic and performance upgrades for the Range Rover so it really didn't come as a shock to us when the British tuning firm released yet another one of its programs for the British luxury SUV. This time, Project Khan is calling their new Range Rover program the 'Diablo', an SUV that touches on all of our hidden dark sides: cold, calculated, and ready to pounce at any given time. Project Khan made sure to give the Range Rover 'dark' and mysterious exterior upgrades, including carbon fiber bullet side vents that were given a red finish. The front lower lip was also given the same red carbon fiber treatment as were the rubber side steps, which were also dressed in red. Then there's the set of 22" RS lightweight wheels with 'you guessed it' red lining running the circumference of the wheels. All the red accents on the Range Rover perfectly compliment the gloss black finish, providing the perfect metaphorical two-tone color of the Diablo.[...]
