The Mercedes SL65 AMG has been around the block for quite some time now, but there seems to be no end in sight for aftermarket packages for the German drop-top sports car. Can't say that we're surprised at all. The SL65 AMG has always been one of our favorite Mercedes cars and after finding out what Inden Design did to it, it just made our itch that much harder to scratch.

The German tuning firm that's made a name for their impressive programs on Mercedes vehicles has come out with another winner. Inden Design's aerodynamic program comes with a new wide body kit that takes the appearance or at least closely resembles the look of the SL65 AMG Black Series. Complementing the wide body kit are other new features, including new front and rear bumpers, a boot lid spoiler, new side skirts, a carbon fiber roof, wider wheel arches, a new bonnet with two air vents on either side, a new grille, a new exhaust system, and a set of 20" alloy wheels wrapped in 265/30 tires on the front and 325/25 tires at the back. Inside, Inden Design left the changes to a minimum, opting only to dress the steering wheel and some parts of the instrument panel in Alcantara.[...]
