Japanese tuners like Wald International have never been the type to have any nationalistic bias with their programs. If there's a car that's ripe for a project, they don't hesitate to put their boots on and get to work. That's no more evident than with the 2011 BMW 5-Series, codenamed 'F10'. Despite being a German brand, Wald International nonetheless prepared a pretty slick restyling program for the sports car, one that includes fresh aerodynamic pieces forged from fiberglass-reinforced plastic.[...]
