

BMW 1-Series M Coupe by TVW Car Design

09/08/2011 02:36 by admin

The continuous game of tuning one-upsmanship never seems to stop when it comes to the BMW 1-Series M Coupe. The car's been out on the streets just recently and yet, it feels like we're seeing one program after another come out of the proverbial woodwork. The latest tuning firm to introduce a tuning program for the sporty baby 'M' is TVW Car Design, which gave it plenty of new aesthetic and performance ammunition. Among the things that stand out with TVW's program for the 1M Coupe include a new carbon-fiber rear spoiler, a black painted roof made out of carbon-fiber, and a set of 20" blacked-out wheels. Dive even deeper and you'll find that the 1M Coupe also got a new adjustable KW coilover suspension that has spent enough time in the testing circles to promise even better ride comfort for the baby M. Inside the car, TVW opted to get rid of the sporty seats in favor of leather-covered bucket seats. The steering wheel was also dressed up with LED indicators that are complemented by an aesthetically-pleasing orange stitching.[...]

Source: topspeed