Auto brands aren't the only names that are coming to the Frankfurt Motor Show; some of the world's most prominent tuning brands are also coming in force to show off their latest programs. One of these brands is German tuning company, Hamann, which will be introducing their new Paragon program for the Porsche Panamera. Though the program is still under development, the word is that it's going to come with an extensive aerodynamic package that will also be complimented by a modest performance boost. As far as the aerodynamics are concerned, the Paragon Panamera will receive a new and aggressive front bumper with large air intakes, and LED daytime running lights. In addition, the program will also carry a new hood, wider wheel arches, a new rear bumper and rear diffuser, a huge rear wing, a new exhaust system with two large central tail pipes, and a set of 22" dark-finished forged wheels.[...]
