Unless you're a big Mazda fan, you've probably not heard of Re-Amemiya. The Japanese tuner with at peculiar name is a particular fan of Mazda's rotary engines. When it came time to present a car for the Toyko Auto Salon, Re-Amemiya created the Genki 7, based on the Mazda RX-7. We have no explanation why Re-Amemiya chose to base its streamline car on a seven-year-old design as opposed to a modern RX-8, but it still looks cool enough for us not to wonder too much. ...
