

Maserati GranTurismo MC Stradale by Novitec Tridente

11/10/2011 00:19 by admin

The Maserati GranTurismo MC Stradale is one delicious sports car. Sure, it doesn't carry the same esteem as its Ferrari sister, but it's still a meaty and juicy sports coupe that just jumps out of the pack. And with Maseratis like this, you can always count on one tuning company to be front and center when it comes to producing some sickening performance modifications. So hello there, Novitec. We see that you wasted little time in tweaking the sportiest Maserati model in the family. Before we get to the new tweaks Novitec did under the GranTurismo MC Stradale's hood, it's worth noting that the Italian tuning company also worked on some aerodynamic details of the sports car, particularly a central air scoop on the hood that's flanked by large air vents. There's also a black-finish boot lid spoiler, two 105mm black-coated or polished tailpipes, lowered suspension springs, and a new set of 21" and 22" double-spoke design alloy wheels wrapped in Pirelli P Zero high-performance tires.[...]

Source: topspeed