

Kia Rio B-Spec Race Car

13/10/2011 02:11 by admin

The run up to one of our favorite auto shows has begun and we're already getting a few looks at some of the cars that are expected to be in attendance. One of the early reveals is the Kia Rio B-Spec Race Car, the Korean automaker's very first B-Spec offering. The car was developed by Kinetic Motorsports and will be unveiled at SEMA in a month's time. For their part, Kia may not have the same cache as the likes of Toyota and Honda in B-Spec racing, but that certainly doesn't mean that they're not looking at breaking into the scene like gangbusters. The car itself already comes packed with plenty of technical and mechanical modifications, complete with a fully decked red-and-white racing livery, a new suspension set-up comprising of a MacPherson strut front suspension and torsion beam rear axle, a roll cage, and plenty of additional racing safety equipment.[...]

Source: topspeed