

Ford Focus by Bojix Design

21/10/2011 22:54 by admin

A lot of people might not know this but the new Ford Focus has will only be making its debut at the SEMA Auto Show this year. That's probably why Ford decided to roll out a fleet of Focus models to the event, all of which were tuned by a different aftermarket company. One of the Focus models scheduled to attend SEMA comes by way of Bojix Design, which is no stranger to modifications on the Focus after already boasting of a number of programs for the sports hatch. For the SEMA-bound model, Bojix decided to add a little European flair to the car, complete with an aggressive styling that includes a Bojix body kit, a 3dCarbon upper roof spoiler, a set of 20" Rennen M10 wheels on the exterior. As far as the interior is concerned, the changes come in the form of Katzkin leather seating surfaces and door panels, Alcantara-covered surfaces, and a new Accele rearview mirror that features a panoramic view.[...]

Source: topspeed