Chevy just couldn't come to this year's SEMA with the Camaro and not give us a project based on the convertible version. So, ladies and gentlemen, here it is: the Camaro Red Zone Concept.

The vehicle relies on current and future accessories to deliver what the carmaker calls a design statement. It is also used as a platform for the debut of a new, retro-inspired stripe graphic that will hit the market in the near future.

Let's see what this open-air project has to offer:
