It was more or less expected that Honda would put a lot of emphasis on its not-so-well received 2012 Civic range at this year's edition of the SEMA aftermarket show in Las Vegas. The Japanese brand brought along a total of seven modified Civic Si Coupes and sedans including a two-door model equipped with a limited-edition Honda Factory Performance (HFP) package and several concepts. "The Honda Civic was instrumental in the first import-tuner movement in the U.S. during the '80s," said Bruce Smith, vice president of Service and Technical Operations for American Honda. "The all-new Civic Si builds on that proud history by offering inspiring performance, improved fuel economy and a great platform for personalization.[...]"
