

2011 SEMA Auto Show: The Muscle Cars

04/11/2011 16:26 by admin

SEMA is different from just about every other major auto show on the planet. Its purpose is to shift focus from the automakers to the aftermarket companies that have become popular because of their custom works on some of the world's most popular vehicles. Sure, some brands will be at the 2011 SEMA Auto Show showing off their works too, but for the most part, they share equal billing with the tuning companies. Many vehicles had their time to shine in the SEMA spotlight, but none more so than the plethora of Camaros and Mustangs - and even the Mopar-tuned Challenger. Every year, there's a number of muscle cars that are given the royal treatment in terms of tuning, and this year has been no different. Maybe it's the Americans' obsession with good ol' fashioned muscle, or maybe it's the fact that all of the major muscle car makers are US born and bred. Either way, it was muscle car mania in Vegas, and we were there to take them all in.[...]
