

Ford F-150 DeeZee American Guardian

04/11/2011 20:27 by admin

Italy has those Lamborghinis and the UK boasts of Lotus rides. Sure, they can have them. Here in our neck of the woods, law enforcement officials prefer less flash and more size. Something that won't scare with you speed, but will send you quaking in your boots with pure intimidation. This is the Ford F-150 DeeZee American Guardian and criminals should be very afraid of it. Currently on display at SEMA, this gargantuan Ford F-150 comes with all the necessary law enforcement paraphernalia that makes it the moving embodiment of "law enforcement muscle." The interior flashes a matte silver finish with an All-American logo emblazoned on both sides of the pick-up, fitting right to its unique moniker. It also has the customary police sirens on the roof and the front grille, as well as mammoth bull bars that make for a good ally during those ram-busting chase-downs. Other pertinent items added to the DeeZee American Guardian include a new set of BMF wheels wrapped in Goodyear tires, new AirRaid intake kit, a Magnaflow exhaust, and a HyperTech Max Energy tuning kit. This kit raises the output of the F-150's 6.2-liter V8 to numbers that are significantly higher than the standard pick-up's 411 horsepower and 434 lb/ft of torque output.[...]

Source: topspeed