With the 2011 SEMA Auto Show fast approaching, one automaker has taken the lead-up to introduce some of the models they'll have in attendance at the world's biggest aftermarket auto exhibition. You can always count on Hyundai to make a splash at SEMA and this year appears to be no different. After a teaser of an Ark Performance-tuned Veloster a few weeks ago, another Veloster has been given its own rendering round-up leading up to the grand unveiling in two weeks time. This time around, the car comes courtesy of PM Lifestyle and true to their name, this Veloster looks to have a lifestyle all its own. Nevermind the fact that the car will carry a mechanical overhaul that includes NOS, launch control, and a high-flow racing catalytic converter - estimated output is around 163 horsepower - this Veloster comes with some exterior and interior modifications that will definitely thump your senses.[...]
