Japanese tuning firm, Premier4509, is trooping to the 2012 Tokyo Auto Salon with a stunning program for one of the most iconic super cars in recent history: the Mercedes SLR McLaren. The full details surrounding this program won't be unveiled until the doors officially open in Tokyo, but Premier4509 is wasting little time in getting our juices going by releasing a few teaser photos of the finely-tuned SLR McLaren. From what we've been told, Premier4509 is planning to make around thirty bodykits for the SLR with one being displayed in Tokyo next week. Among the components that have been put into it are a new carbon front bumper, new side skirts, a new rear bumper, a diffuser, a new rear spoiler, wheel arches, and a new set of alloy wheels that add even more stylish substance to what is already one of the most awesome-looking supercars on the planet.[...]
