Anytime someone has a car like the Mercedes SL65 AMG and gets an opportunity to do some tuning work on it, that person shouldn't even think about hesitating. Now if that person happens to live in Japan, there's even more incentive to bring their German sports car to the boys over at Veilside, considering that they're in the process of unveiling a new aerodynamic body kit at the 2012 Tokyo Auto Salon. Developed under Veilside's new Black Fortune sub-brand, the aerodynamic program consists of a complete overhaul of parts, including a new front bumper spoiler, new side skirts, a new rear bumper and diffuser, a new rear spoiler, and a slew of other parts, all of which are made entirely out of carbon fiber.
