Lamborghini's new prized steed, the mighty Aventador, has become a tuning favorite as of late and as expected, the list of aftermarket companies itching to work on the Aventador has steadily increased by the day. The latest company to take a stab at the Italian supercar is RENM Performance. The German tuning company has released the details of the Lamborghini Aventador LP700-4 Limited Edition Corsa (LE-C) program. According to RENM Performance, the LE-C program was designed to not only improve on the supercar's race track capabilities, but to also maintain its road drivability. Talk about killing two birds with one stone; RENM Performance's program for the Aventador is as good as it gets. On the aesthetic front, the LE-C program comes with plenty of new, lightweight carbon fiber body sections that highlight the package's revised aerodynamics program, including an adjustable rear wing and a new set of exclusive LE-C light weight center-lock forged wheels. Meanwhile, the interior also gets a nice make-over, courtesy of new carbon fiber and Alcantara sections, a revised steering wheel, and new racing seats.[...]
