

Porsche 911 CLR 9 S by Lumma

28/02/2012 21:00 by admin

There's no doubt in anyone's mind that the 2012 Porsche 911 is a tuning magnet all its own. That's why when the car was first introduced late last year, tuners from all corners of the world began racing to build the first program for the new 911. At the 2012 Geneva Motor Show, we're going to see a couple tuning firms present their first program for the 911, one of them being Lumma Design. Their very first program for the new Porsche 911 is called the Lumma CLR 9 S. Made up of an attractive aerodynamic package that includes exterior and interior modifications, the CLR 9 S represents the latest chapter in Lumma Design's growing fascination with Porsche vehicles. As part of the exterior aero package, Lumma added its own advanced aerodynamic body kit CLR, consisting of a front spoiler lip that emphasizes the sportiness of the new integrated Cupspoilerschwert "Elfers." The program also has a new CLR frame front grille design, as well as refined headlights, an expansive rear fender, a three-piece spoiler lip that ensures more downforce on the rear axle, and a new set of 20" Technikrad LUMMA sport wheels Edition "GS / R" that can be color customized upon request.

Source: topspeed