

Porsche 911 V-GT by Vorsteiner

01/03/2012 03:09 by admin

The newest generation Porsche 911 is quickly becoming a tuning favorite in the industry. So much so, in fact, that most tuners have no problem releasing preview images of the sports car even if the program itself isn't complete yet. We've already seen SpeedArt and TechArt take this route and now it appears that Vosteiner is jumping on this growing trend with a preview of their newest program, the 911 V-GT. The full breadth of details behind the V-GT haven't been released yet, although we do get a pretty good look, courtesy of this image, of exactly what we're in store for when the program's officially unveiled. Judging by the visual evidence, we can expect at least a few things for the 911 V-GT, including an aero kit that consists of a new front spoiler, revised side skirts, a new hood, a new rear diffuser, a lightweight roof panel, a new sports exhaust system, and a new set of alloy wheels ranging from 20"-22." [...]

Source: topspeed