Nissan has made it purpose show to the European debut of the Nismo Juke in Geneva today, and it's not because they want to show off a car they will never build. We might have exciting news for you, as sales of the much-needed hot crossover model will start towards the end of 2012, according to an official statement.

This will be the first of many Nismo performance models that will be a bit like MINI's John Cooper Works - range toppers. So, all we know now is that the Juke will be available wi... [...]
