Gemballa Racing's McLaren MP4-12C GT3 had its racing baptismal at the German ADAC GT Masters Series and as a way of paying tribute to their very first racing machines, Gemballa decided to commission the help of the fine folks over at Cam Shaft for a special dress up on a Bugatti Veyron Sang Noir. The unique wrap made by Cam Shaft gave the Veyron Sang Noir a pretty intense look, combining Gemballa's noted blue color trim with glow-in-the-dark lightning graphics and matching brand logos plastered all around the car. The specially-wrapped Veyron Sang Noir doesn't carry any performance modifications because the car only served the purpose of being a promo vehicle for the Gemballa's new racing team. Whether they have plans of building a Veyron race car in the future, though, is a totally different subject... As a quick tangent to the guys over at Cam Shaft, you might recall some of their previous offerings, particularly the Lamborghini Koi Camouflage, which we showed you in November 2011.[...]
