

BMW 1M Coupe by Vorsteiner

03/05/2012 01:39 by admin

BMW has already stopped taking orders for the 1-Series M Coupe, but the car is still enjoying lots of attention from tuners. In fact, despite the fact we believe the cars needs no updates, there were tons of tuners who didn't agreed with us and they have find one, or more solutions to improve the sports coupe. The latest program comes from Vorsteiner who announced a pretty impressive tuning kit will be unveiled on May 19th at Bimmerfest 2012 in Pasadena, CA. All the tuner unveiled until now are some images of the parts of the exterior upgrade package, but because we are talking about Vorsteiner we are expecting great things. The package will include a new carbon fiber front spoiler with integrated brake duct system, the rear diffuser has been replaced with extended aero fins and signature GTS-V designed splitters, also made in carbon fiber. The tuner is also offering a lightweight boot lid replacement weighing 11.5 lbs. with integrated wing profile element in carbon fiber and a new titanium exhaust system. The car sits on a new set of 19 and 20 inch forged concave wheels.[...]

Source: topspeed