The Porsche Panamera is one of those cars that's a little tricky to make body kits for. Pegged as a luxury sports saloon, tuners have to be wary of being a tad aggressive on giving the Panamera a makeover that loses the car's high-class luster. Fortunately, German Special Customs managed to dodge that proverbial land line with their latest offering, the Panamera Turbo Nighthawk. GSC's Nighthawk program offers a simple yet classy body kit for the Panamera, one that's careful not to go overboard with any of its components. The body kit is comprised of a new front spoiler lip, a vented carbon fiber hood, new side gills, sport side skirts, a modified rear diffuser, a rear spoiler, and last but certainly not least, a new quad exhaust system. With the new components fitted into the Panamera Turbo, GSC went with a matte gray finish on the car's body, creating a visual chemistry of matte gray and carbon fiber that doesn't exactly blow up our eyes in a hue of rainbow colors.[...]
