Even if some automakers attempt to revive old models using next-gen technology and styling elements, it's sometimes impossible to do that, especially due to the market conditions which are continuously demanding a certain type of design, engine performance or body style. This is exactly what Racer X Design, a small body styling company, is aiming to do with the early BMW 6 Series produced between 1976 and 1989, according to a report posted by Autoblog via SeriousWheels. The resulting model, dubbed RZ-M6 looks, let's say, appealing, as it combines elements of the current 6 Series with retro elements that make the overall appearance of the vehicle aggressive yet stylish.
