German tuner Brabus has made a living out of building some of the most powerful tuning programs for Mercedes vehicles. This time, they're taking a different route by revealing a new styling package for the Mercedes-Benz CLS63 AMG. The first thing you'll notice is that Brabus veered away from the monochrome colors of the CLS63 AMG. Instead, they went with something a little more fashionable: Orange. From there, they went ahead and pushed the envelope even further on the interior, choosing purple as the predominant color. Really, pretty much everything in the interior is in this shade, including the seats, the floor mats, and yes, even the roof. The interior also has orange stitching throughout the cabin, which Brabus probably added to have a semblance of continuity to the exterior color of the CLS63 AMG.[...]
