In preparation for the Essen Motor Show, SpeedART has finally released real photos of their Porsche Panamera Turbo based PS9-650 tuning package. Previously, SpeedART kindly teased us with design sketches and then details.

As the name implies, the PS9-650 features 650 hp and 890 Nm of torque thanks to bigger turbos and intercoolers, sport air filter, a sport exhaust system (with switch valve volume control), sport catalytic converters, and to really tweak those new turbos, a reprogrammed ECU. Acceleration from 0-62 mph comes in 3.5 seconds, continuing onto a top speed in excess of 200 mph. If 650 hp is too spicy for you, SpeedART also offers medium, mild and bland performance packages that allow the engine to produce 600, 550 and 520 hp.

In the styling/aerodynamic department, the PS9 is outfitted with a front chin spoiler, hood vents, a rear diffuser with integrated exhaust pipe holes, a rear hatch spoiler, modified rear bumper (with air outlets), and aggressive side skirts. Other design details include 22-inch three-piece 'LSC FORGED' wheels and the aforementioned sport exhaust system (available in polished stainless steel or matt black).

For the interior, SpeedART added a sport steering wheel with F1-shift paddles (which can be outfitted with aluminum-, wood- or carbon fiber inlays), carbon fiber trim, contrast stitching on the door panels and seats, revised instrument dials, and exclusive floor mats.

The SpeedART Panamera SP9-650 will have its public debut at the Essen Motor Show from Nov 27 - Dec 12 in hall 11, stand 203.
